A pale oak and porcelain kitchen harnessed traditional techniques to create a thoroughly contemporary end result...

Designer David Lisle said: "As experts in bespoke furniture, we have decades of experience in refining traditional joinery techniques, translating these to work harmoniously with modern technology and contemporary design. This kitchen in Nantwich is a perfect example. Though decidedly modern in design, the fine art of traditional craftsmanship is used throughout."

Westin was commissioned to manufacture a bespoke cooker hood for the scheme. The hood specified not only provides a perfect design feature by spanning the cooking area and providing a perfect symmetry to the space but ensures that extraction is concentrated in the centre of the unit to maximise fume capture. This kitchen in Nantwich is a perfect example. Though decidedly modern in design, the fine art of traditional craftsmanship is used throughout."

Lisle added: "Through careful selection of subtly grained timber and dark, honed porcelain tops, the furniture absorbs the light in the space, creating a minimal and industrial aesthetic. This gives emphasis to the state-of-the-art appliances, such as the bespoke brushed steel extractor at nearly 3m long."

Westin was commissioned to manufacture a bespoke cooker hood for the scheme. The hood specified not only provides a perfect design feature by spanning the cooking area and providing a perfect symmetry to the space but ensures that extraction is concentrated in the centre of the unit to maximise fume capture. This is aided by an inclined base that allows fumes to collect before extraction through the industrial style baffle filters.
